How do creative practices respond to, and attempt to intervene within, historical and ongoing forms of injustice, including in our contemporary moment? How can the arts move us to be, and do, otherwise? This course looks to examples of feminist activism (across visual art, media, spoken word performances, poetry, film, and theatre, as potential examples) in relation to some major and lesser known local and global social justice movements and issues. Together we will work to understand and assess various relations between art and aesthetics, feminism, politics, action – and cultural change.
